
Title: Green Book II

Author: Bleen the Green

An image of a decayed willow tree, the branches withered

Now that we are in the middle of great and terrible events, we must look at these situations dispassionately.

It is vital to those of us who seek to maintain the greater balance in our world, to not judge events by the labels of good and evil but how they affect the entropic exchange between chaos and order. This is the first level to understanding how our world truly works.

We must not let ourselves be swayed by the professed beliefs of the players in this great drama. We must dig with our vision and intellect to see if indeed the victory of one side or another, the ascendance or decline of any one group or groups begins to gain dominance in the reflection of the great balance.

We must steel ourselves to a level of indifference to the sad plight of the men, women and children who will suffer this struggle.

We may have our personal feelings on the subject but we must never lose sight that in the final analysis the health of our world depends on maintaining an equality between the two poles of existence. What we see as "evil" is the physical manifestation of the chaotic forces that seek to impose entropy upon the fabric of order that was brought about before the beginning of time and represent the arrow of time and the flow of energy towards final dissolution.

Still, if we do not strive towards shall be swallowed into a great nothingness that contains no energy nor matter for chaotic forces to work upon. Our path lies in balance. As we represent the sentient forces at work in the world, it does not behoove us to favor one side or another.

We cannot by our nature favor final dissolution. We desire existence and so it is our duty as seers to view, examine, investigate and promote the continuation of the balance which our very fabric of being depends on.

These are our simple thoughts on very complex issues. This is the beginning of the process not the end.

Respectfully,
Bleen the Green

